

DANIEL GREEN

Daniel Green is a senior director at truTV. He's been with the network since 2001, when it was known at Court TV. He works in the truTV digital department where he spends most of his time on Impractical Jokers. He produces the weekly "Ask a Joker" video series as well as the Official Impractical Jokers Podcast, which he also co-hosts with Casey Jost and James McCarthy. And if that wasn't enough, he is also a producer on two Impractical Jokers truTV spin-offs, Inside Jokes and After Party. Danny has travelled across the country and the globe working to help promote the show.

But he is probably best known for his Season 7 appearance as the angry, disruptive, yet charming Vanilla Clown.

He is married to Andrea Prysiazniuk Green, a cake artist. They have three teenagers: Siena, Antonia and Oscar.

Danny wishes to thank all the folks who made the Impractical Jokers: Homecoming exhibit such a great success: the props and costumes crew at NorthSouth Productions; all the folks at truTV who created the exhibit's visual look and marketing campaign, not to mention his bosses, Puja Vohra and John Cassidy; Janice Monger and her Staten Island Museum staff, who were always wonderful to work with. And, of course, the four Jokers, who are as funny, kind and decent off-camera as they are on TV.

And super special kudos to Joe Imburgio, who is without a doubt America's most hilarious museum curator.

Danny's first visit to Richmond County took place in 1986, while he was on the clock at his Wall Street banking job. He would ride the Ferry back and forth several times during his supposed 30 minute lunch break. He still loves Staten Island and thinks the $19 Verrazzano Bridge toll is a value at twice the price.